THE PRODUCE NEWS

West to warm this weekend, Texas grapefruit gets a chill

A ridge of high pressure will bring above-average temps to California growing regions this weekend.

Starting tomorrow, temperatures will rise by 15 to 20 degrees above where they were most of this week. Oxnard, CA, will have a high temp of 80 tomorrow, 82 on Sunday and 77 on Monday. Salinas will see max temps this weekend of 71, 75 and 75. Santa Maria will have highs of 80, 78 and 80.

Look for a possible uptick in the supply of strawberries this weekend and early next week. Lettuces from this region are on the way out.

Desert regions of Coachella will also see warmer temps. Coachella will see max temps of 90 Saturday through Monday. Look for supplies of Bell peppers to increase over the weekend into early next week.

Beware as the warmer temps will peter out by Tuesday as a storm front comes through California bringing cooler temps and a chance of rain on Tuesday and Wednesday. High temps along the coast will drop back into the 60s and min temps back into the low to mid-40s. The desert region max temps will drop from the 90s down to the mid-70s for the remainder of the week.

SOUTHERN GEORGIA SAW FREEZING TEMPS THIS WEEK

The freezing temps anticipated for southern Georgia and the panhandle of Florida materialized. The coldest temps were in the region of southwestern Georgia and the panhandle of Florida where the min temp on Tuesday dipped into the 20s and was in the mid-30s on Wednesday. Look for serious damage to any remaining fall crops from these regions.
