THE PRODUCE NEWS

Heat wave hits Florida, Culiacan unseasonably cool

Heat hit Florida over the weekend and will continue through the week with tomorrow and Thursday being the hottest days. Look for the strawberry-growing region of Plant City to hit a high of 88 degrees tomorrow, while Immokalee will touch 89 tomorrow and Thursday. Belle Glade will see a max temp of 89 on Thursday. The nightly lows will also be above average with min temps reaching as high as 70 in some growing areas.

Look for an increase of production coming out of all major growing regions of Florida throughout the week. This may relieve some pressure on the tight supplies coming out of Mexico right now.

Temps in Florida will cool off a few degrees over the weekend, but next Monday, Feb. 17 the temperatures will warm up again reaching into the upper 80s.

CULIACAN REMAINS UNSEASONABLY COOL

Nogales shippers are still feeling the effects of the rain and cold temps last week in Culiacan and the surrounding areas that have reduced supplies, caused quality issues and tightened markets. Weather over the weekend was nice, but another storm front came through the region yesterday bringing cooler temps and a slight chance of rain.

Tonight, the min temp will be 10 degrees cooler than last night, getting down to 49. Tomorrow will be the coldest night of the week dipping to 46 and then 49 on Thursday. It won't be until Friday that min temps will be back in the 50s. Look for supplies to remain tight and prices to remain strong in Nogales on all items coming from the Culiacan region. Temps will finally begin to warm next week with highs climbing into the upper 80s by Tuesday, Feb. 18.
